What percentage of Zimbabwean households have backup/alternative power solutions?

46% of Zimbabwean households have backup or alternative power solutions, with 45% of it being solar. In contrast, only 2% of South African households use solar as a form of alternative energy and only 4% of households use backup power. 96% of South African households solely rely on the national grid for power.

Is Zimbabwe a good country for alternative sources of electricity?

Zimbabwe ranks 3rd on the list for households using alternative sources of power. Between 2016 and 2021, there has been a decrease in the proportion of households with electricity that is always or mostly available to the order of -7%. This places Zimbabwe in the bottom 5 on progress in electricity availability.

How has Zimbabwe's electricity situation evolved?

Zimbabwe's electricity situation has remained stagnant, with the total power generation output currently at just over 25% of the national demand. Load shedding has been a common practice for decades in the country. Those who can afford it either have backup power solutions or have switched to alternative forms of power.

Why is Zimbabwe's energy business unprofitable?

Zimbabwe imports electricity to meet the energy deficit and sells it to consumers locally at a loss, making it unprofitable for utilities to reliably supply power. This also makes the energy business undesirable for Independent Power Producers (IPPs).

Why is Zimbabwe experiencing a power crisis?

Zimbabwe started experiencing power outages around the turn of the millennium. These power cuts worsened during the hyperinflation era and reached their peak during the global economic crisis of 2008. During this period, the integrity of public infrastructure including power generation infrastructure deteriorated.
