Should you buy or lease a solar panel?

Choosing the right solar panel financing option will make going solar more affordable and extend your long-term benefits. A solar lease can help you avoid hefty upfront installation costs and enable you to benefit from energy savings sooner. However, it can also negatively impact solar incentive savings and home value.

Should you buy solar panels with cash?

Not everyone can afford to buy solar panels upfront, so there are financing options, such as solar leases, to help people who want to go solar but don't have the cash on hand. Buying solar panels, whether it be with cash or through a solar loan, will give you the best long-term solar savings.

How do I lease or rent solar panels?

Here's a step-by-step guide on how to lease or rent solar panels: Start by researching solar leasing companies in your area. Look for reputable companies with strong customer reviews and a proven track record. Consider their financing options, contract terms and maintenance policies. Contact multiple solar leasing companies to request quotes.

What is the difference between leasing and buying solar panels?

There are a few important differences between leasing and buying photovoltaic (PV) panels. The most obvious is that solar leases will never lead to full ownership of your panels, whereas purchasing your solar panels in cash or through financing will. This single difference leads to a few additional implications, which we'll discuss below.

Do solar panels add value to a home?

Owning solar panels increases the value of your home. In fact, studies have shown that homes with solar panels sell 20% faster, and for 17% more money. Leasing solar panels, on the other hand, can actually make it much harder to sell your home to potential buyers, without adding much value at all to your home. Why is that?
