Because the MXes in China and the one in Azure are in different organizations, you are totally right - Non-Meraki VPN would be the solution. This is working fine, it is just some considerations that you need to have in mind. 1. The non-meraki VPN will use standard VPN ports 500 and 4500. Those might be blocked by Chinese provider or Great ...

Friends, does anyone have experience with vMX Azure deployments in China? Looking for performance data, experience or any issues with its deployment and caveats I should be aware of? I'm aware of dedicated Chinese Meraki Dashboard requirements so no issues there. I'm looking to deploy vMX Medium licensing. Appreciate the support.

This is a Meraki MX physically placed in what is to become the main headquarters datacenter, but is logically configured from the chinese Meraki Dashboard. In this way, we have the China Gateway MX configured as a One-Armed Concentrator, and the Headquarter MX in Routed Mode as an Edge Firewall.
